

New faces at practice

A handful of new faces dotted the line-up of Vernon Lakers at Monday night's practice session. The local junior A club has enlisted the services of four players, most with a good list of credentials to their credit.

Among the four are a pair of major junior hockey veterans, Mark McCleary and Troy Bakogeorge.

McCleary, a 20-year-old, spent two years with New Westminster Bruins, of the Western Hockey League. He also played most of this season with Delta Flyers, of the Coastal Division of the B.C. Junior Hockey League, before the coaching change this season left him pondering his future in the game.

McCleary, who plays any of the forward positions, shoots left.

Bakogeorge, an 18-year-old right winger with a right-handed shot, spent a full season with Moose Jaw Warriors and started this season with Kamloops Blazers, both teams of the WHL.

The other two, while not of major junior hockey experience, definitely have interesting backgrounds in the game.

Edward (Scooter) Henson, a goaltender, comes this way via University of San Diego where he has been playing until this point in the season.

Henson, another 18-year-old, hails from Providence, Rhode Island. His NCAA experience is as valuable than major junior hockey experience.

The fourth player may be a prime find for the local club is he continues along the path he's been following so far this season.

Dallas Drake, 16, was brought up from Rossland of the Kootenay International Junior B Hockey League. Drake had accumulated almost 100 points in just 24 games with the Junior B club.
